

Andile Ncube

I am a committed social justice advocate and health equity leader with a strong background in community development, psychosocial support, and human rights advocacy. My work has consistently focused on advancing inclusive health systems and creating safe, supportive spaces for marginalized populations

I am a community health advocate and emerging social leader passionate about gender justice, mental health, and accessible care for vulnerable communities.

With experience spanning LEGABIBO (Lesbian, Gay & Bisexual Botswana), Lifeline Northern Cape, the TEKANO Health Equity Fellowship, I've built a strong foundation in psychosocial support, community mobilisation, and LGBTQIA+ health advocacy.

I currently focus on designing affirming, community-based solutions for transgender and gender diverse people including visibility projects, safe-space dialogues. My work is grounded in human dignity, lived experience, and reimagining how communities can care for one another.

I am committed to shaping health systems that are equitable, culturally responsive, and centred on those most often overlooked.

BUILDING HEALTH, TOGETHER.
