

Doctor Liza Street

Paediatrician and COO, Mammoth

Doctor Liza Street is a South African paediatrician, health-tech entrepreneur, COO at Mammoth and founder of Ajuda. Her work sits at the intersection of clinical practice, healthcare operations and the data infrastructure needed to support a more connected and efficient health system.

After qualifying as a paediatrician in 2013, Doctor Street spent seven years in private practice, caring for infants, children and adolescents across a wide range of clinical needs. Her frontline experience highlighted the impact of fragmented patient information on clinical care, system efficiency and healthcare value.

At Mammoth, Doctor Street leads operational execution across healthcare providers, funders and healthcare organisations, while also serving as clinical lead for the platform. Her focus is on ensuring that healthcare data is connected, trusted, clinically useful and practical at the point of care, with technology and AI used to reduce burden and support clinician-led decision-making.

She also contributes her time as a volunteer board member for AKSA (Arthritis Kids South Africa), where she advocates for children living with juvenile arthritis.

Outside of her professional work, Doctor Street enjoys an active family life. She is married to a fellow doctor, and together they are raising three energetic boys.

BUILDING HEALTH, TOGETHER.
