

Sasha Stevenson

Sasha Stevenson is a human rights lawyer and the Executive Director of SECTION27, a public interest law organisation in Johannesburg.

She holds bachelors, honours and law degrees from Rhodes University and an LLM from the University of Cambridge.

Her work, and that of SECTION27, seeks to secure systems change that realises health and food rights.

This has been achieved through representing the families of mental health care users who died after their disastrous deinstitutionalisation from Life Esidimeni; securing the re-start of the programme that feeds 9,6 million children at school every day after COVID-19; preventing the move of sexual predators from one school to another through the operationalisation of the Child Protection Register; and ensuring the removal of unsafe pit latrines and their replacement with safe toilets in all schools in Limpopo.

BUILDING HEALTH, TOGETHER.
